3 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

CANADA FIRE RAGES, EVACUEES SET FOR LONG WAIT

A wildfire ripping through Canada's oil sands region was set to grow rapidly on Sunday but move further away from heavily populated areas, a fire official said. The fire which started near the town of Fort McMurray in northeast Alberta, spread so quickly that the town's 88,000 inhabitants barely had time to leave. Large parts of the town have been incinerated. The front of the fire was moving southeast, away from Fort McMurray toward the neighboring province of Saskatchewan, said wildfire information officer Travis Fairweather, but was not expected to reach the border on Sunday. ONE WINNING $429M POWERBALL TICKET SOLD

2 One winning ticket matched the numbers drawn on Saturday night for the multistate Powerball jackpot for a payout estimated at $429.6 million, the ninth-highest U.S. lottery prize in history, officials said. The winning numbers selected just before 11 p.m. EDT were 25 66 44 5 26 with the Powerball 9. Lottery officials said one ticket, purchased in New Jersey, had the winning combination, according to media reports. The winner was not identified. Winners of huge lottery payouts sometimes do not come forward publicly for months. It was the largest jackpot for any U.S. lottery since January, when three Powerball tickets split a record $1.6 billion. The odds of winning at Powerball are one in 292 million. Statistics experts say that means an American is roughly 25 times more likely to become the next president of the United States than to win the game. Kelly Cripe, a Texas-based lottery spokeswoman, said Saturday's Powerball followed 17 consecutive draws without a winner. REUTERS

US, ALLIES CONDUCT 25 AIRSTRIKES AGAINST ISLAMIC STATE MILITANTS: US MILITARY

3 The United States and its allies targeted Islamic State in Iraq with 17 air strikes on Saturday, and hit the militant group with eight air strikes in Syria, the U.S. military said on Sunday. Six of the strikes in Iraq were near Mosul, hitting four Islamic State tactical units and destroying four vehicles. In Syria, three strikes were near Mar'a. They struck three Islamic State tactical units and destroyed three Islamic State fighting positions, the military said in a statement. REUTERS

BOLARIS' WEATHER WATCH: LET'S WELCOME BACK THE SUN

Bolaris' Weather Watch

JOHN BOLARIS
@weathersavior

I don't know about you, but these last two weeks of the funk, clouds, drizzle, rain and unseasonably cool temperatures zapped me of energy and overall happiness. Weather moods are quite common as the paucity of sunlight — along with extended periods of unsettled weather — can definitely bring you down and put you in what I call a deep weather funk.

On the other hand, a nice dose of vitamin D (sunshine) helps to boost one's energy and spirits. Whether it's psychological or physiological, we are all affected by the weather.

The reason for the extended period of the funk was due to what we call an atmospheric omega block, which looks like an upside-down U in the atmosphere and locks in whatever type of weather is going on in a particular region.

If you're lucky, you're on the nice side of the block with days of sunshine. If you're unlucky, you live in the funk for an extended period of time.

Unfortunately, the Northeast was locked into the unsettled side of the block, as the atmosphere got cut off from any type of movement, much like a clogged toilet. You need some sort of a kicker to move the block, in our case it was a very strong cool front that arrived Sunday afternoon (just in time for Mom's Day) which relieved us of atmospheric constipation and allowed for the sun to return.

Looking ahead, New York and Boston will see a good amount of sunshine right through most of Thursday, although New York City could see some clouds spill in for a brief time on Tuesday.

Philadelphia, after some sunshine to start the day on Monday, you will see a return to clouds and a passing shower on Tuesday as a stalled front will oscillate over the region into Wednesday morning then clear out.

But before we start doing the happy dance, there are signs that the funk could return as we move into Friday and the upcoming weekend.

A crash course on Boston's first Flugtag

It even has teams designing "planes" destined to crash.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN

With the deadline fast approaching for applications to Boston's first-ever Red Bull Flugtag competition, teams around the city are fine-tuning their bids for the kooky celebration of flight.

The contest invites groups of five to design a craft, then push that craft off a 38-foot-high platform over a body of water. In Boston's case, that's the Charles River.

The teams dress up in costumes, perform a choreographed dance number then shove off. Points are awarded for creativity, quality of the dance, and distance the mini-airplanes fly before crashing.

Some aim for engineering precision, others for sheer laughs. YouTube videos of planes shaped like giant cakes, sharks, soccer balls and human heads speak to the variety of ways creative tinkerers have traveled from liftoff to splashdown. The cut-off for applicants is May 13. The event is scheduled for August 20.

Last Thursday, Secret Boston invited a handful of Flugtag teams to meet with Metro in SB's headquarters in Jamaica Plain.

Here's what they told us about their plans:

Team 90s Nostalgia

For this group of engineers with degrees from Northeastern, inspiration came from the children's television cartoon show "Ed, Edd 'n' Eddy."

"We remembered in an episode they build a plane from all the stuff in the schoolyard and launch off the roof, so it's thrown together," said Eugene Zeleny, 26, of Arlington. "It's a clunker, essentially, that works."

They plan to re-create the junky airplane and dress up like characters from the show, he said. He'll build the thing in his basement woodworking shop.

Style will be key, Zeleny said, but at the same time the team will have their eyes on the distance prize. They've been doing their homework to learn from the many, many, many past failures documented in videos online, he said.

"We did hours and hours of like YouTubing all of Flugtag and drinking beer," said teammate Mike Caulley, 26, of Jamaica Plain. "It was fun research."

Team Boston Party Piñata

"We're building a large donkey made out of papier-mâché as big as we can possibly make it, with a big goofy head on it," said Jared Daley, the 30-year-old self-described "mayor" of Secret Boston. "And it probably is not going to fly."

That's Daley' vision for the official SB craft.

"It's gonna make the party happen," he said.

Because why not, the piñata will be piloted by a real pilot: Bose Roy, 33, who flies for a commercial charter jet company. But, she admits, even she can't make a giant party favor take flight.

Team Sons of Liberty

Matt DiStefano, 26, of Brookline, and four of his friends are planning on re-creating the Boston Tea Party, with a twist.

"One guy is going to be a Redcoat, and we're going to put him in the boat with the tea and then throw them off the platform into the water," he said.

The plane will be a miniature version of the ship Eleanor (one of three vessels boarded by the Sons of Liberty the night of the infamous tea-dumping in 1773). "We knew there would be other people doing it," he said, "but we're trying to be the ones" to get picked for the big day.

Team Pizza Rat

"You might be familiar with the Pizza Rat," said Andrew Haycox, 31, of the South End, "who was famous for taking the pizza."

Haycox said he plans to dress up in a rat costume, stand on a rolling cart made to look like stairs, then dangle in the air from a hang glider shaped like a pizza slice.

It's an ode to the viral video sensation from last year, in which a rodent drags a slice of cheese pizza down the stairs to a New York City subway station.

His goal, Haycox said — and that of his team of "barely educated" friends — is to build the cheapest plane of the bunch, and to beat the meticulous engineers from top colleges at their own game.

"Pizza Rat is flying in the face of all the fancy show-boaters," he said. "We're simultaneously low-balling and trying seriously to win. Hopefully when the MIT kids are up they have, like, some really bad wind and flop or something."

Duckling Day at the Boston Public Garden

In a tribute to the beloved children's book "Make Way for Ducklings" on its 75th anniversary, Mayor Marty Walsh joined families at the Boston Public Garden on Sunday to ring in Duckling Day.

Under some gray skies, marchers — some in furry duck costumes, others sporting decorated stovepipe hats or pulling a rolling flock of little toy ducklings — made their way through the park for the Mother's Day activity and literary celebration. DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN/METRO

Man struck by train at Boston's Broadway MBTA station

Buses were replacing rail service at six stops on the Red Line Sunday afternoon after a man was struck by a train at Broadway Station.

The victim was described as a man around 55 years old who had been trespassing at the station around 2:36 p.m. when he was hit by a passing train, according to police. His injuries were described as serious but not life-threatening. He has been taken to an area hospital. Police do not suspect foul play.

After the collision, the man had been briefly pinned under the train, according to a report from NECN.

Investigators continued to analyze the scene Sunday afternoon, and the MBTA wrote in an update on its website that shuttles were replacing service from the Park Street station to JFK/UMass.

Regular service resumed around 4:12 p.m. with "moderate residual delays," according to the T. SPENCER BUELL

RACE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE

Trump, in reversal, says the wealthy should pay more taxes

Trump, who effectively sealed the Republican presidential nomination last week after the departure from the race of his two remaining rivals, has pledged to unify the party behind him.

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump said on Sunday he is open to raising taxes on wealthy Americans, backing off his prior proposal to reduce taxes on all Americans.

"I am willing to pay more, and you know what, the wealthy are willing to pay more," Trump told ABC's "This Week."

But prominent Republicans remain deeply divided over the New York billionaire's candidacy. Republicans such as Paul Ryan, the top Republican in the House of Representatives, have distanced themselves from Trump over his proposal to temporarily ban Muslims from entering the United States.

Trump's fiercely anti-trade rhetoric is also at odds with the views of Ryan and many other pro-business Republicans.

Trump's tax proposal, released last September, included broad tax breaks for businesses and households. He proposed reducing the highest income-tax rate to 25 percent from the current 39.6 percent rate.

Pressed on the contradiction between his latest comments on taxes and the September tax plan, Trump said that he expected his original proposal was "a concept" and he expected that it would be changed following negotiations with Congress.

"By the time it gets negotiated, it's going to be a different plan," Trump told ABC. He emphasized in interviews with both ABC and in a separate interview with NBC's "Meet the Press" that his priorities were lowering taxes on the middle class and businesses.

"The middle class has to be protected," Trump told NBC. "The rich is probably going to end up paying more." REUTERS

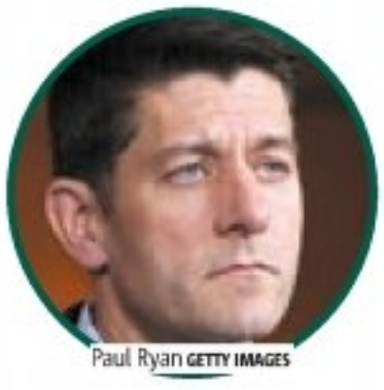
SOAP OPERA

Name calling, secret meetings, accusations — the unhinged soap opera we call Campaign 2016 is getting wilder. So pack the kids off to school and climb into the Stratolounger, here are my three things to watch this week in politics.

1. RYAN'S HOPE?
Some big Republicans are already endorsing Donald Trump, but Speaker of the House Paul Ryan has put metal in the science oven by withholding his support for his party's presumptive nominee. And the sparks will be sizzling all over Capitol Hill as Congress comes back into session this week. Thursday, Ryan and Trump are expected to meet to see if they can agree on some things. If so, watch for a strained but cordial show of unity; if not, keep an eye on how GOP lawmakers pick sides ... with the political fate of both men potentially at stake.



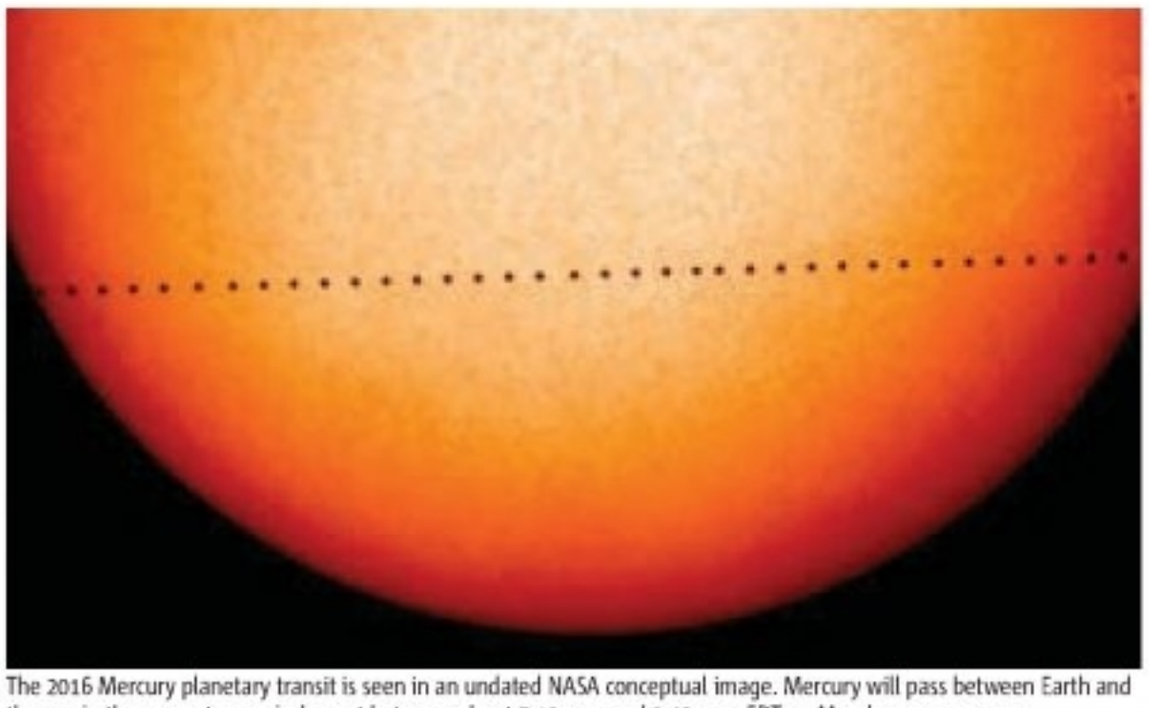
Paul Ryan GETTY IMAGES

TOM FOREMAN
Opinion
CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the new book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

2. THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS
So why won't Bernie Sanders tell his army of eager, idealistic young supporters to give up already and throw their support behind Hillary Clinton? Maybe because the senator from Vermont won Indiana and has a good shot at winning a couple more states this month, too. He can't beat her math at this point. Clinton has a virtually unbeatable edge for the nomination. But with every win he presses his argument that he may be a stronger candidate for the Democrats. Just as importantly, he applies pressure for Camp Clinton to adopt more of his positions or maybe take his measurements for a veep suit. Stay tuned ...

3. THE EDGE OF NIGHT
Some frustrated Democrats wanted anyone but Hillary Clinton with her huge negative ratings and political baggage. Some desperate Republicans wanted anyone but Trump with his huge ego and — well, pretty much everything. Now some on both sides and in the middle are hoping for a miraculous third party candidate to emerge from the darkness. Watch for a more names to be floated fast but then abandon hope, because the only three that will stick around are Shoulda, Woulda and Coulda.

Mercury poised for rare 'transit' across sun's face on Monday



The 2016 Mercury planetary transit is seen in an undated NASA conceptual image. Mercury will pass between Earth and the sun in the rare astronomical event between about 7:12 a.m. and 2:42 p.m. EDT on Monday. NASA HANDOUT

Stargazers will have a rare opportunity on Monday to witness Mercury fly directly across the face of the sun, a sight that unfolds once every 10 years or so, as Earth and its smaller neighboring planet come into perfect alignment.

The best vantage points to observe the celestial event, known to astronomers as a transit, are eastern North America, South America, Western Europe and Africa, assuming clouds are not obscuring the sun. In those regions, the entire transit will occur during daylight hours, according to Sky and Telescope magazine.

But Mercury is too small to see without high-powered binoculars or a telescope, and looking directly at the sun, even with sunglasses, could cause permanent eye damage.

Fortunately NASA and astronomy organizations are providing virtual ringside seats for the show by live-streaming images of the transit in its entirety and providing expert commentary.

The tiny planet, slightly larger than Earth's moon, will start off as a small black dot on the edge of the sun at 7:12 a.m. Traveling 30 miles a second, Mercury will take 7.5 hours to cross the face of the sun, which is about 864,300 miles in diameter, or about 109 times larger than Earth.

"Unlike sunspots, which have irregular shapes and grayish borders, Mercury's silhouette will be black and precisely round," Sky and Telescope said in a press release.

The event will come into view in the western United States after dawn, with the transit already in progress. The show will end at sunset in parts of Europe, Africa and most of Asia.

NASA Television, available on the Internet, will broadcast live video and images from the orbiting Solar Dynamics Observatory and other telescopes. The show includes informal discussions with NASA scientists, who will answer questions submitted via Twitter using the hashtag #AskNASA.

Scientists will take advantage of Mercury's transit for a variety of science projects, including refining techniques to look for planets beyond the solar system.

"When a planet crosses in front of the sun, it causes the sun's brightness to dim. Scientists can measure similar brightness dips from other stars to find planets orbiting them," NASA said.

Mercury's last transit was in 2006 and the planet will pass between the sun and Earth again in 2019. After that, the next opportunity to witness the event will not come until 2032. REUTERS

Feds order Washington subway to tighten safety after rail fire

Federal officials ordered Washington's troubled subway to tighten safety standards because of a rail fire, a directive that followed announcement of an extensive repair program to boost reliability.

The response by Metro subway employees to the explosion of a third-rail insulator and fire on Thursday showed major lapses by the system's control center, the Federal Transit Administration said in a directive.

Metro, the second-busiest U.S. subway system, must "take urgent action to address persistent safety findings with personnel response to safety risk," it said.

The Thursday fire was the eighth smoke and fire incident involving Metro since April 23, the FTA said.

The Kardashians are not digging Cuba

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

How awesome would it be to visit Cuba? Not very awesome, if you're a Kardashian, apparently. The whole team went down to check out the newly available vacation spot — because Cuba is "so hot right now" — but they're apparently finding the amenities a bit lacking. "They love the culture, but they don't like the technology. They've had an issue every two seconds about not having Internet. They complained they couldn't get on Snapchat. They're frustrated and they can't wait to leave," a source tells Page Six. But a rep for Kim Kardashian says it's all a bunch of nonsense. "If there are any issues, they are production issues," her rep says. "The ladies don't have any issues and are having a great time. They knew there wouldn't be Internet service before they came." Yeah, but I can imagine Kim & Co. interpreting "no Internet" as, like, just really slow Internet.

Speaking of production issues, the folks tasked with chronicling the family's adventures is apparently having troubles of their own — like getting locals to sign release forms. "They don't have reality TV in Cuba. The Kardashians aren't a big deal," the source says. "They are like, 'Who are you? Why are you filming?'" Oh man, it must be nice to be Cuban.

Michael Phelps gave his son an appropriate bro-ish name

Celebrities giving their kids ridiculous names is nothing new. And as far as that trend goes, Michael Phelps' pick for his newborn son isn't so bad, I guess. But man, way to go ahead and define a kid's personality before he's barely had time to open his eyes. The 18-time Olympic gold medalist and fiancée Nicole Johnson welcomed their first child late last week, and what did they decide to call him? Boomer Robert Phelps. Yup, Boomer. But hey, it's your kid, Phelps. Knock yourself out.

J. R. R. Tolkien vs George R. R. Martin. Epic Rap Battles of History

This one has been a long time coming. The lyrical misfits over at Epic Rap Battles of History pit fantasy fiction's two great authors with too many middle initials against each other, as "Lord of the Rings" creator J. R. R. Tolkien takes on "Game of Thrones" titan George R. R. Martin. And it gets really real, really fast. "We all know the world is full of chance and anarchy, so yes it's true to life for characters to die randomly," Tolkien raps. "But news flash, the genre's called fantasy. It's meant to be unrealistic, you myopic manatee." That's a sick burn, J. R. R.

Louis C.K. quit the Internet and so can you

Are we looking at our phones too much? That's the idea Louis C.K. is working with lately, as he's discovered that looking down to check your phone while in conversation is a new and special kind of rude where you're putting the person in front of you on pause. It's extra sucky when the person is your kid. "My kids are nice people so they just wait," C.K. tells Conan O'Brien. "[My daughter] dies inside every time I do this." His solution? Asking his daughter to set a parental code on his phone's Web browser. "It's supposed to be the other way around," he says. "It's supposed to be a parental code to keep your kid off the Internet."

Ozzy and Sharon Osbourne on the outs

On the one hand, it's never nice to hear about a marriage break apart, but on the other it's inspiring to see that even at age 67, Ozzy Osbourne can throw down like a terrible husband half his age. Ozzy and wife Sharon Osbourne are reportedly calling it quits after 34 years of marriage and several seasons of reality TV scrutiny because Ozzy is allegedly having an affair with his hairstylist. "Sharon went ballistic with Ozzy and accused him of having the affair," a source tells the Sun. "She said she had suspected something had been going on for some time and now had proof. People are wondering whether Sharon went through Ozzy's phone before accusing him. She has done that before, but in the past she was checking if he'd been using drugs." Sharon reportedly kicked Ozzy out of the house, and he's now staying in a Los Angeles hotel. "He is not speaking to Sharon," the source adds. "And she has not let him back into the house." Yikes.

Single and Swiping

Laurie Davis Edwards is the founder of eFlirt, an online dating concierge service, and the best-selling author of "Love @ First Click: The Ultimate Guide to Online Dating."

Your online dating soulmate may be swiping right next to you. ISTOCK

When you're constantly checking your phone, how many connections do you think you're missing out on? If you were paying attention, you might see that cutie at Starbucks who tried to make eye contact or that person on the subway who wanted to say "hi," but decided you weren't approachable with device in hand.

These days, you might not even know the boy or girl next door.

According to a 2015 Gallop survey, more than half of us check our phones a few times an hour. Eleven percent of people even 'fessed up to checking their device every few minutes. Bottom line: Potential partners are all around you and you're missing them.

Proximity-based apps aim to close the gap so you can connect device-to-device with those who are nearly face-to-face.

Cheekd uses your phone's Bluetooth to connect you with matches nearby. When you're within 30 feet of another single, it will send you a notification. If you both opt-in, the messaging and flirting can commence.

Happn shows you matches you've crossed paths with naturally in life. Each time you are within 250 meters of a match, they appear at the top of your newsfeed — and it will even show you the intersection where you encountered each other.

The irony is that these apps are a throwback to the first few dating apps developed — you know, before Tinder existed. And the old-school version of location-based apps weren't even popular.

In 2009, when I started my business and the first dating apps launched, my clients were hesitant use them. "It's creepy to see who is around me," they told me. But today, my clients enjoy it instead. "I get to see guys I'm probably just missing on my commute," one recently told me.

As a society these days, we're less afraid of people on the Internet and more concerned with having access to as many singles as possible to find the one.

Look up and see who is around you ... or at least join apps like Cheekd or Happn to find out who you're missing nearby.

The season of magic

Melisandre is in the throes of a crisis of faith. HELEN SLOAN, HBO

"Game of Thrones" is entering a new phase, and Carice van Houten's Melisandre is at the center of it.

DARIA BUYANOVA
Metro World News
letters@metro.us

GETTY IMAGES

The sixth season of "Game of Thrones" started off with two shocking twists — both involving the Red Witch, Melisandre.

Though she'll have to tweak her skills when it comes to seeing the future, Melisandre was key to the resolution of the biggest mystery since the end of the show's fifth season last June: how Jon Snow will come back to life. (Because nobody actually believed the showrunners when they said he was dead, right?)

Melisandre's magic may not have put Stannis Baratheon on the Iron Throne, but if it can raise the dead — and, in another shocking reveal, keep her alive well beyond a natural human lifespan — then maybe the Lord of Light she worships hasn't forsaken her after all.

Known for violence on a personal and battlefield scale to move its plots along, the sixth season of "Game of Thrones" is being dominated by those who can wield magic. We asked Dutch actress Carice van Houten about what's we can expect from Melisandre.

How did you approach the character this time around after everything that happened in Season Five?

We've left my character in a really bad state. We've never seen her so shaken, so out of control and even confused and vulnerable. In the very last scene [of the fifth season], where she's confronted with devils asking: "What happened?" — she can't even speak; she's completely thrown.

For me, it was great as an actor to move away from this controlling, fanatic, strong character who never shows any emotion and is just very, very focused. And all of a sudden, she's like, "Oh, my God! What happened?" And I loved it; it's my favorite season.

Melisandre horrified a lot of fans when she sacrificed Shireen, the daughter of Stannis Baratheon, last season. She's been at the center of a lot of the worst events over the show's history.

As an actress you go, "Wow! This is great, epic and nobody is going to forget this." I mean, I had a few of those: the leeches on the penis and the giving birth to the shadow babies. But this really topped everything, of course. As an actor you think this is great, but as a person you think it's the most horrible thing you have done. And it's not going to get me any sympathy points.

The shooting itself was also quite harsh. It was extremely cold with strong wind and snow. And, of course, my character is never cold, which is also a challenge in itself. And then there's Kerry [Ingram, who plays Shireen] — a sweet, bubbly, lovely girl, who is also a very good actor — making you believe she is really on fire. That doesn't really make it easier. But we did have a lot of fun.

Have you been harassed by fans over your character's actions?

Oh, yes, but it's funny — there are also people who like my character. I'm a bit suspicious of these people [Laughs]. But, you know, it's nice for an actor. Obviously, people like to hate, or like the mystery Melisandre is surrounded with. And it's difficult to like a character like this, in comparison to the Onion Knight.

Should we expect more nudity in Season Six?

This is my answer: Yes and no. And you will see why.

HOW TO GET AHEAD

The hardest part of the job search isn't what you think

Feeling demoralized and "flawed" can take a toll on job seekers.

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alizah.salario@metro.us

First dates and job interviews have a lot in common. In both scenarios, success is determined by chemistry, personality, responses to open-ended questions like "Tell me about yourself" and vague assertions about being a good fit. But do you want to pick, say, a computer programmer using the same criteria as you would a life partner?

Not really, says Ofer Sharone, a professor of sociology at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and the author of "Flawed System/Flawed Self: Job Searching and Unemployment Experiences," which compares hiring practices in the U.S. and Israel.

Sharone's research suggest that in the U.S., hiring is often based on a subjective process. Not only does this allow employers to rely on their biases and perpetuate homogeneity in the workplace, but "it creates an experience of the job search which is highly personalized," says Sharone. "So therefore, when you're unemployed and you're facing rejections for six months to a year, it's very common to hear people start talking about they're flawed, or saying 'something is wrong with me.'"

Sharone offered his best advice for staying upbeat, even while your résumé returns nothing but radio silence.

Know what you're up against.

When hiring is based on highly subjective elements such as chemistry or gut feelings, it can "create a challenge for anyone who is extremely skilled and qualified to try and conform to the mold for what "the right fit" is," Sharone says. "Networking, together with interviews, creates a [hiring] situation that has a lot with intangibles."

The focus on intangibles tends to put more focus on passion, as opposed to skill. This ethos can lead job seekers to take rejections far more personally — particularly those who've been scouring the market for six months or more — and leave them feeling demoralized, and even flawed, says Sharone.

Mind the gap (on your résumé).

Even if you're unemployed, do something career-related. "If you're a professional, you want to have something at the top of the resume that you're currently doing in your field," Sharone says. "You have to be active and up-to-date in your profession, and whether you're paid for it is really secondary. Employers have absurd biases, and this is a way to counter the bias."

Consulting gigs or volunteering are great ways to stay engaged while unemployed, says Sharone. Whether it should or not, the stigma against the unemployed persists.

Seek support.

During a period of unemployment, it's common for self-esteem to take a hit. "A good way to counter this is to find a peer support group. Find people who are going through the same thing. It deindividualizes the experience," says Sharone.

People often think they're the only ones feeling discouraged, but understanding biases and structural obstacles can prevent frustrated job seekers from putting the onus entirely on their shoulders. "You realize the dice are loaded, but you need to keep rolling the dice nonetheless," he says.

Keep your eye on the prize.

When discouraged, it's easy to fall into extreme thinking, but "you have to recognize the kind of game you're playing. It's somewhere between the lottery and chess. It's a mistake to think you have all the power, or that you have no power," adds Sharone. "Job seeking is not like baseball. You just need to hit it once."

Are you an email jerk?

Are you unknowingly creating inbox angst?

JENNIFER SAWYER
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

Be concise, clear and cautious ISTOCK

A forgotten attachment. A glaring typo. A never-ending reply-all thread. We've all been on the sending — and receiving — end of common email annoyances. But beyond being more cautious about simple slipups, there are some practical steps you can take to quell inbox angst.

Here's what to consider before you hit send:

Know your audience

Before you begin typing, "Stop, take a breath and think about your audience," career and executive coach Maggie Mistal says. "It's really about [knowing] who you're sending it to and what's going to be easier for them."

Begin with a descriptive subject that clearly highlights what the email will be about. Then think about what you might need from your recipient and vice versa.

Say more with less

There's nothing worse than feeling your eyes glaze over by the time you read paragraph six of an email (if you even get that far). To curb reader fatigue, be as concise as possible, without clouding essential information in wordy paragraphs. "I always say, 'Bullet point me!'" Mistal explains. "You might need to communicate a lot in one email, so separate out the points, and bold the action steps you [the recipient] needs to take." Likewise, don't send three emails when one will suffice just because you're in a rush and forgot some necessary info. Think through what you need to address, and do so in one swoop.

Be mindful of tone

We're all in a rush to get things done, but before hitting "send," consider how your words might be received, given that email lacks the intonation and nuance of verbal communication. "There's no tone in email, so you have to assume that anything you say can be taken the wrong way," Mistal says. Having second thoughts about something you're writing? Mistal suggests having another pair of eyes read it over, or writing a draft and allowing some separation time before sending. "Sleep on it, or if you can't wait overnight, go for a walk around the block," she suggests. "Come back with a fresh perspective."

Know when to take it offline

Praise publicly, criticize privately. It's one thing to compliment a job well done in an email, but if you need to give negative feedback, pick up the phone or address the issue in person. And the worst thing you could ever do? Throw someone under the bus in an email. "Blaming someone else on your team never sits well," Mistal says. "It's lasting and more public" she says, and can trigger defensive reactions. "You're better off picking up the phone and working it out."

Be polite

One-liners are OK if you have a rapport with the other person, but generally beginning with a kind "Hi, how are you?" sets a courteous tone. "Email is an opportunity to get your point across in a way that's respectful," Mistal says. "Etiquette isn't useless — there's a real reason and value."

10 Most boo-worthy athletes for Boston sports fans in 2016

These 10 athletes deserve mountains of boos whenever they visit Boston.

MATTHEW BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

Peyton Manning is retired. Derek Jeter is retired. Kobe Bryant is retired. For years and years you could place those three players at or near the top of any Boston sports hate list, but the times they have changed. Most of the venom coming from Boston sports fans these days is pointed in the direction of NFL executives (Roger Goodell, Mike Kensil), executives of other NFL teams (Jim Irsay, Ryan Grigson) and coaches of other NFL teams (John Harbaugh). Basically, anyone "higher up" who had anything at all to do with Deflategate, Boston fans will instinctually loathe.

But what about on the playing field?

Here's the list. Let me know your "most hated" on Twitter @Burke_Metro.

10 DeAngelo Williams

RB, Steelers

Williams slammed the Pats on Twitter earlier this year when asked if he'd be interested in playing in Foxboro.

"From what I'm told only Tom Brady likes [Bill Belichick], so no thank you I'm happy where I am."

When someone replied, "Bill Belichick owns the Steelers," Williams came back with the following: "No, he owns the most seasons/Super Bowls with questionable tactics in securing the win aka cheating."

9 Sidney Crosby

C, Penguins

It's hard to believe that Sid the Kid has been in the league for 10 years now. He hasn't crossed paths with the Bruins all that much in big games, but his incessant whining on the ice always draws the ire of Boston fans.

8 Brandon Marshall

LB, Broncos

The Broncos talked a whole lot of smack before the AFC Championship game, which makes the fact that the Pats lost that game that much more difficult to swallow. Marshall signaled out Rob Gronkowski prior to the game, saying that the only reason the big tight end gets open is because he "pushes off." For the record, Gronkowski had eight catches for 144 yards and a touchdown in the Pats' two-point loss

7 Dennis Schroder

G, Hawks

The freshest name on the list, Dennis Schroder lands here because of the extra-curricular activity he dished out during the Hawks-Celtics series in April. Schroder got into it with Isaiah Thomas in Game 3 and then Jae Crowder in Game 4. Schroder was booed nearly every time he touched the ball in Boston, and "Schroder sucks!" was on equal ground with "Let's go Celtics!" in terms of favorites during the series.

6 PK Subban

D, Canadiens

Subban has been agitating Bruins fans since 2010 and was the main heel during the Bruins' tenure as the best team in the Eastern Conference from 2011-13. The hatred has now turned into mostly jealousy as the Canadiens and Subban owned the B's for a couple of years.

5 Jacoby Ellsbury

CF, Yankees

Ellsbury's not living up to his side of the bargain when it comes to being hated in Boston. The easiest way to gain instant hate in the Hub is to willingly jump to the Yankees and then play well, but Ellsbury has been a non-factor in the Bronx and the Yankees have been decidedly mediocre.

4 LeBron James

F, Cavaliers

He's a coach-killer. He's entitled. He's a whiner. From 2008-11 he was regarded as the best player in the NBA, but the Celtics owned him. Kevin Garnett and Paul Pierce weren't big fans of LeBron, and the Garden was mostly a house of horrors for him … until Game 6 of the 2012 Eastern Conference Finals when he poured in 45 points in a Heat win.

3 Alex Rodriguez

DH, Yankees

He nearly became a Red Sox in 2004 but the Yankees swooped in and landed him from Texas. Later that year, he got into a brawl with Jason Varitek and swatted the ball out of Bronson Arroyo's glove while running to first in the ALCS. And then there's all the steroids stuff. The reason he's not higher now though is that hating A-Rod has become way too easy.

2 Eli Manning

QB, Giants

This man cost the Patriots two Super Bowl titles with what are arguably the two luckiest passes in Super Bowl history — the helmet catch to David Tyree and the pass down the sidelines to Mario Manningham. This particular Manning seems to be mediocre against every other team in the league except the Patriots.

1 Terrell Suggs

LB, Ravens

No one has talked more bull poop about the Patriots over the years than the Ravens linebacker. It came to a head in the 2012 AFC title game when the Ravens beat the Pats in Foxboro.

"Those are the most arrogant pricks in the world, starting with Belichick on down," Suggs said on the field, in between taunting Patriots fans. "Funny, ever since SpyGate they haven't been able to win."

Add in the fact that Suggs is just a rotten dude and you have the recipe for the most boo-able man in Boston sports.

Terrell Suggs seemingly gets arrested every offseason (yes he even got arrested in 2016). GETTY IMAGES

Aries Don't be daunted by the changes going on around you. Turn any negative you encounter into a positive. Strive for perfection and detail, and focus on getting things done.

Taurus Make things happen. Aim to improve your life. Alter your living quarters or lifestyle to suit your current needs and projects. Personal changes and romance are favored.

Gemini Something or someone will lead you astray. Resist temptation, and concentrate on what you can accomplish. Arguing will not bring the results you want.

Cancer Your suggestions will be well-received and will put you in the running. Partnerships are favored, and expanding ideas, making plans will improve your life.

Leo You desire change, but will face opposition if you are too blatant about what you want to do. Putting everything in its place before you share your plans will give you an advantage.

Virgo Engage in discussions that will increase your knowledge and help you gain respect. Short business trips will give you an opportunity to promote your ideas.

Libra Don't let a challenge stop you from doing your own thing. Find a space that allows you peace of mind and provides the right setting to develop something spectacular.

Scorpio Sort out personal affairs and discuss your plans with an important person in your life. Someone with interesting ideas will help you reach your destination.

Sagittarius You are best off making some hands-on changes. Physically moving things around or renovating a space to help carry out one of your dreams will be your best outlet.

Capricorn You can reap the rewards for smart moves you have made in the past. Financial gains, settlements and canny negotiations are all favored. Celebrate with someone you love.

Aquarius Do your best to bring about changes that will make others notice you. Children or an older friend or relative will support your efforts and decisions.

Pisces Say less and do more. You'll have outstanding ideas that can help you bypass anyone trying to make you look bad. A partnership is favored, as is romance. EUGENIA LAST
